Student Centric Methods (2023-2024)

The college employs various student-centric methods, such as experiential learning, participative learning, and problem-solving methodologies, to enhance students' learning experiences and facilitate better understanding of concepts. The key initiatives include:

1. Experiential Learning: Hands-on training programs, workshops in current fields, industrial visits and field trips provide real-time exposure and make learning engaging and practical.
2. Participative Learning: Activities like book reviews, role play, case studies, and communication skill development foster active student participation and deepen their understanding.
3. Skill Development through Participation: Students participate in intercollegiate and interdepartmental seminars, conferences, exhibitions, and contribute to editorial boards of departmental and college magazines/newsletters, improving their presentation and creative skills.
4. Management-Specific Initiatives: For management students, participative learning is promoted through guided group discussions, debates, advertisements, quizzes, and panel discussions, enhancing interpersonal and managerial skills.
5. Elective Courses and Skill Development: Elective courses and soft skill training programs are integrated into the curriculum to broaden knowledge, improve abilities, and increase employability.
6. Problem-Solving Projects: Real-time problem-solving is emphasized through individual projects for postgraduate students and group projects for undergraduates in the science stream.
7. Interdisciplinary Projects: Collaborative projects across departments, such as studying environmental pollution and its impact (life sciences), employee satisfaction surveys (management, humanities, and social work), and software solutions (mathematical and computer sciences), enhance critical thinking and teamwork skills.

These methods foster an interactive, practical, and skills-oriented learning environment, preparing students for academic, professional, and personal success.

TRADITIONAL TRUNKS

At the time, traditional travel trunks were bulky and heavy, with curved tops that were hard to get in and out, making them inconvenient for long journeys.

Yullian, drawing from his years of experience sought to improve upon the design of trunk design with a canvas which was more lighter, durable and convenient to store and use, compared to traditional trunks.
