WORKSHOP OBJECTIVES

Data is the new frontier of 21st century. According to a Harvard Business Report by Thomas H. Davenport and D. J. Patil (2012) data science is going to be the hottest job of 21st century and data analysts have a very bright career ahead. From academic world to corporate sector, and from service and financial institutions like banks to market researchers the data is being used and treated in various ways like deriving business insight, understand consumer behavior, exit-polrev forecast or predict the outcome of football world cup (Goldman Sachs did it and got surprised!), develop objective plans for new ventures, study the brand image, or write a scholarly articles in high impact journals and develop high quality thesis/project work. A good knowledge of quantitative data analysis is a sine qua non for progress in academic and corporate world. Keeping this in mind this workshop has been designed in such a way that students, researchers, teachers and corporate professionals who want to equip themselves with sound skills of data analysis and wish to progress with this skill can learn it in-depth and interesting manner using IBM SPSS.

PEDAGOGY

The focus of current training program will be to help participants learn statistical skills through exploring SPSS and its different options. The focus will be to develop practical skills of analyzing data, developing an independent capacity to accurately decide what statistical tests will be appropriate with a particular kind of research objective. The workshop will not go into manual calculations and will focus only on the options provided in SPSS processor. The basic concepts and theoretical assumptions underlying each test will be discussed so that those who even have no background in research and statistics can master it. The workshop will also cover how to write the obtained output from SPSS in APA format.

LEVEL OF PARTICIPANTS

Faculties, Research Scholars in the branches of Commerce, Management, Economics, Nutrition and Dietetics, Physics, Chemistry, Mathematics, Statistics, Computer Science, Information Technology who wish to understand the concepts and application of Statistics only need to apply.
